FROM: J. Kenneth McDonald
Chief, History Staff

SUBJECT: Transfer of Declassified OSS Records to the National Archives

REFERENCE: Memo for DCI from Chief, History Staff, dtd 9 December 1983, Subj: Status of Declassified OSS Records

1. This is for your information, to report on the steps taken since 2 February 1984 when you approved the referenced memorandum's recommendations for transferring CIA's declassified OSS records to the National Archives.

2. Memorandum of Understanding. In response to Office of Information Service concerns about the protection of personal privacy in releasing these records, the General Counsel recommended that CIA and the National Archives negotiate a Memorandum of Understanding, to detail the National Archives' procedures for processing the OSS records before making them available to the public. The National Archives has drafted a proposed Memorandum of Understanding, and the Agency has provided certain revisions for their consideration. We expect to agree upon and execute a final Memorandum of Understanding soon.

3. Final Check and Transfer. On 16 April 1984 three CIA reviewers began the final check of the approximately 198 cubic feet of OSS records already at the National Archives. The Information Management Staff plans to complete this final check by the end of May 1984, and to complete their final check of the remaining 2800 cubic feet of OSS records by the end of April 1985. As the final check is carried out over the next year, CIA will transfer these records in increments to the National Archives.

4. Notification Abroad. As you know, the Directorate of Operations is preparing a telegram to stations abroad explaining the release of these declassified OSS records, so that they can inform their liaison counterparts--especially those of our Western European wartime allies--of this decision. The DO also proposes to ask you to inform the Secretary of State of these records' forthcoming release, so that he may ask U.S. ambassadors to report this to the foreign ministries of the countries concerned.

5. Public Affairs. The Director of Public Affairs has met with his opposite number at the National Archives to consider how best to announce the opening of these records to the public. Once CIA completes its final check in May, the National Archives may need as long as four months to prepare the first batch of 198 cubic feet for opening to the public. Since very large numbers of researchers will request access when these records are opened, the National Archives does not want to announce the records' transfer until they can set a firm release date for the first batch. The Director of Public Affairs will consult further with the National Archives and the interested parties at CIA after the National Archives begins processing the first batch..

6. Selective Declassification Program. CIA has undertaken to transfer a large and comprehensive collection of OSS records to the National Archives over the next twelve months. This will be a major historical resource, permitting for the first time documented studies of the role of American intelligence in World War II. The transfer of our OSS files will thus be both the first step and a long stride in fulfilling your commitment to the review and release of historically significant records.

1. As you will note in the reference (attached), [] is concerned that by releasing the OSS records we run the risk of personal jeopardy. I share that concern but have no recommendation for a solution. 25X1

2. There is only one example in the attached package. We know there are many more in the OSS records but it would require considerable effort to sort them out. The classification review of the records did not address the problem of "personal jeopardy."

3. In your previous opinion, you advised us that we could not withhold release of these records under the provisions of the Privacy Act. You did allude to the possibility of some other authority to withhold these types of records.

4. We request an opinion that states definitely that we cannot withhold records that may result in "personal jeopardy" or under what provisions they may be withheld.

SUBJECT: Transfer of OSS Records to the National Archives

- A. Chief, History Staff memorandum to DCI, dated 9 Dec 1983, subject: Release of Declassified OSS Records to the National Archives, and Status of DCI Histories
- B. GC memorandum to Executive Director, dated 20 Dec 1983, subject: Release of Declassified OSS Records to the National Archives

1. We appreciate your providing us the opportunity to review reference A which relates to the transfer of OSS records to the National Archives and Records Service (NARS) and their ultimate release to the public. We offer the following comments for your consideration.

2. In reference A, the Chief, History Staff (C/HS) discusses an earlier Agency restriction on NARS not to release the names of persons affiliated with OSS without the consent of the persons involved. This restriction was apparently imposed by the Directorate of Operations on the basis of the Privacy Act. By reference B, the General Counsel has determined that the restriction was erroneous. Our concern, and the reason for this memorandum to you, arises principally in the area of individual privacy--an aspect of the transfer of OSS records to NARS that we do not believe was fully treated in either of the references.

a. In reference B, the General Counsel discusses whether the names of OSS personnel can be protected, by deletion from the record, on the basis of their status as OSS employees. He concluded that neither the Privacy Act nor the Freedom of Information Act, nor for that matter the CIA Act of 1949 and the National Security Act of 1947, justify deletions of names for reasons of the individual's OSS status alone. The General Counsel did recognize, however, that the presence of an individual's name in a particular factual context might raise some privacy concerns.

b. In dealing with the limited question put to him, the General Counsel would have no reason to know the nature of the disclosures contained in some of the OSS records. As you might expect, some records of OSS operations provide very graphic descriptions of actions taken by OSS personnel. (Unfortunately, within the limited time available we have not been able to find documented examples of the type of actions that create concerns discussed elsewhere in this paper. Should you want some such cases, we will send a team to the Archives and Records Center to search the OSS files.) These actions were doubtless necessary and tolerable in a combat environment; when viewed on the basis of 1984 standards, morality, and peacetime values, some of these actions might be perceived as needless, improper, or immoral. [REDACTED]

c. It is conceivable that the release of records containing names of OSS personnel could adversely affect their lives or those of their families and associates. Although many former OSS employees are proud to acknowledge their affiliation with OSS, some could have their safety, reputation, or livelihood threatened by public disclosure of certain types of OSS activities; i.e., disclosures reflecting upon their character, personal relationships, perceived aberrant conduct, or participation in activities that today could be considered questionable or, in the very least, distasteful. Some of the operations and OSS actions may have already been recited in books and other publications. Obviously these would not have the same impact as an official Government disclosure through release of the records, particularly when the actual names or identities of the individuals are made public. [REDACTED]

d. On the basis of information in hand, the Agency is not often going to be able to prove that damage will occur. However, in many instances the information available may plainly show that damage to the individual is a reasonable expectation and should be sufficient to justify withholding such information from public disclosure.

Moreover, it is not reaching too far to suggest also that the families of the victims or targets of OSS wartime activity might seek retribution if the activity is publicly identified. The assessment of potential damage cannot be made without an actual examination of the records.

e. Another kind of potential jeopardy is conceivable for individuals who are characterized in documents as secret adherents or opponents of specific political beliefs: pro-Nazi, pro-communist, or pro-U.S. Such documents are included in the OSS records. Public access to such records could result in intense attention to the individuals in their current circumstances, and unpleasant consequences could result for some of them. The implication for such individuals is even more troublesome in the event the characterization was false or in error. Here also the possibility of harm exists. It is likely that such examples are contained among the OSS records. Needless to say, the possibility that OSS personnel themselves have also been wrongly disparaged in some records cannot be ignored. Given it is unlikely that at this late date the Agency will be able to prove that the information is true or false, the only remedy is to continue to withhold such records from public disclosure. [redacted]

f. While it is not likely that former OSS employees will bring legal action against the Agency for wrongful disclosure of information on the basis of an unwarranted invasion of personal privacy, the possibility cannot be discarded. As pointed out in the Privacy Act, the right to privacy is a personal and fundamental right protected by the Constitution. Disclosure of information which harms the reputation of former OSS employees might provide a viable cause of action against the Agency. [redacted]

25X1

3. While the protection of the names of OSS employees is our principal concern, there are others.

b. A related concern is the general impact that the release of OSS records might have on other foreign governments and services. As you know, we have argued forcefully that the release of Agency information under the Freedom of Information Act jeopardizes our relations with other foreign services because of the danger that information sensitive to them might be disclosed. To be consistent with this argument, we should also ensure that the OSS records transferred to NARS do not contain information that could adversely affect the interests of foreign governments and services. Such information could include documents regarding the activities of foreign nationals, the revelation of which could impact on U.S. relations with other governments. [redacted]

c. In the attachment to reference A, Chief, History Staff notes that another restriction on NARS is that "foreign government information must be afforded protection and will not be released without the prior approval of the government involved" and that NARS will honor this restriction. Further, he notes in paragraph 5 (b) of the attachment that the Directorate of Operations proposes to conduct a final check of OSS records to protect material bearing on foreign liaison or other politically sensitive areas. For reasons discussed above, we suggest that this review be thorough enough to include not only information sensitive to United States interests, but also information which is sensitive to others and, if disclosed, could affect our foreign relations. [redacted]

4. We realize that the review and coordination actions necessary to protect the privacy of former OSS employees and to maintain relationships with [redacted] foreign services cannot be accomplished hastily. This project will be a laborious, time-consuming process, given the care needed to avoid harming individuals, other governments, and the Agency. The records still can be processed in increments beginning with the 198 cubic feet already at NARS. However, the document-by-document review needed for deletion of names necessarily will result in a transfer rate much lower than the 200 cubic feet-per-month target suggested by the Agency Historian. The actual transfer rate will depend on the resources that are committed. [redacted]

5. In submitting these comments, I do not want to be misunderstood. We fully understand the Director's desire to make information available to the public for use by historians. Indeed, the historical access program discussed in the Director's correspondence with Senator Durenberger has our full support and OIS is poised to organize and implement this program when authorized to do so and when provided the resources. We all recognize, however, that others--not just historians--will have access to this public information: investigative reporters, foreign media, hostile intelligence services and "sensational" journalists. Actions necessary to resolve the concerns discussed above affect mainly the timing proposed by the Chief, History Staff; they do not impair or impact on the DCI's commitment to release this material.

6. We believe it our duty to call to your attention the concerns outlined above so that whatever the DCI decides on the release of the OSS records he does so with an awareness and understanding of all of the implications associated with the release.

Declassification of Historically Significant Files

1. On 26 August you asked me to find out what the Agency had done and what we could do to release the declassified OSS records in CIA's custody to the National Archives for release to the public. A full report on where we stand is attached. Its final paragraph includes four specific recommendations for your approval.

2. In transferring the first increment of CIA's declassified OSS, SSU, and CIG records to the National Archives in 1980, the Agency restricted the release of former OSS members' names. Finding this restriction unworkable, the National Archives did not process and release the records already received, and CIA did not send them any more. The Agency's restriction appears to have been in error, since neither the Privacy Act (which CIA cited) nor any other law or regulation provides for such a restriction. In light of this, the Agency's custodian of these records is willing to to withdraw the restriction, and to transfer the documents in question--following a quick final check of their declassification--to the National Archives for public release after final processing by the Archives' Declassification Division.

3. The reference memorandum also asks where we stand on the Helms and Colby DCI histories. The Helms DCI history is roughly three-quarters completed in draft, and should be finished next summer. I would be glad to send you the completed draft chapters, which Mr. Helms has approved. Richard Lehman, having been drafted into a highly classified project of which I understand you are aware, has had to set aside his work on the Colby DCI history. He does not now expect to be able to complete this until early 1985. Since he is uniquely qualified to do this history and has completed extensive documentary research, I have agreed to this schedule.

4. I should also report that my deputy, [redacted] is on schedule with her one-volume survey history of CIA, and will produce a draft manuscript by the end of 1984. Staff historian [redacted] should complete a draft of his overhead reconnaissance monograph by next March.

Archives, and Status of DCI Histories

1. This is the full report, requested and transmitted by the references above, on the present status of the declassified records CIA holds of the Office of Strategic Services (OSS) and its other predecessor organizations. My account goes into some detail, since these records' release will begin the selective declassification of historically significant records proposed in your 4 October 1983 letter to Senator Durenberger. My report is organized into the following sections:

- a. The Postwar Disposition of OSS Records
- b. CIA's Declassification of OSS Records
- c. The Impasse with the National Archives
- d. Final Check and Release
- e. Discussion
- f. Recommendations

25X1

CONFIDENTIAL

SUBJECT: Status of Declassified OSS Records

2. The Postwar Disposition of OSS Records:

a. After President Truman dissolved OSS on 1 October 1945, the records of its Research and Analysis (R&A) Branch went to the Department of State and its operational and other records went to the Strategic Services Unit (SSU) in the War Department. When established in September 1947, CIA inherited OSS's operational records along with the records of SSU and the Central Intelligence Group (CIG).

b. In 1946 the Department of State transferred its OSS records to the National Archives. In 1972, at the National Archives' request, CIA organized a team of four CIA annuitants (who were also OSS veterans) who reviewed and declassified these OSS R&A Branch records. The National Archives opened 919 cubic feet of declassified OSS records to the public as review was completed between 1974 and 1978. These files, in Record Group 226, are the most active records in the Military Branch, which serviced some 2900 requests for them in the first eight months of 1983.

c. Between 1977 and 1982 the National Archives, in cooperation with the DA's Records Management Division, appraised the approximately 6500 cubic feet of OSS, SSU and CIG records in the custody of the DO's Information Management Staff. This appraisal determined that approximately 3300 cubic feet were of permanent value and should be preserved for eventual transfer to the National Archives. (List attached.)

3. CIA's Declassification of OSS Records:

a. In December 1978, when President Carter's Executive Order 12065 requiring the systematic declassification review of permanent records over 20 years old went into effect, the DA's Classification Review Division formed a team of 15 annuitants (including some who had reviewed State's OSS records for the National Archives) to review CIA's OSS, SSU and CIG permanent records. For this review the Classification Review Division developed extensive specific written guidelines (in consultation with the team, the DO's Information Management Staff, and the National Archives) to protect such key factors as sources, methods, identities and foreign government information.

SUBJECT: Status of Declassified OSS Records

b. Working under a single executive order and a single set of Agency guidelines, this special team reviewed CIA's permanent OSS records (with the exception of about 100 cubic feet) in a period of just under four years and at an estimated cost of about $500,000. The declassification review began in January 1979 and was completed in September 1982, with the following results:

Total records reviewed	3157 cubic feet
Withheld to remain classified	191 cubic feet
Declassified and available for transfer to National Archives	2966 cubic feet

Thus CIA declassified about 94% of these records and withheld about 6%, principally to protect sources, foreign government information, and foreign liaison relationships.

4. The Impasse with the National Archives:

a. In 1979, as the National Archives appraisal and CIA declassification review of OSS records proceeded, the DA's Records Management Division, in coordination with the DO's Information Management Staff, arranged to begin transferring declassified OSS records to the National Archives. As a first increment, CIA transferred 198 cubic feet of records on 16 January 1980, for release to the public after final processing by the National Archives' Declassification Division.

b. In transferring these records, CIA declared on the National Archives form (copy attached) that they were subject to the Privacy Act under System No. CIA-49, and imposed the following two specific restrictions on their release to the public:

"Foreign Government Information must be afforded protection and will not be released without the prior approval of the government involved.

SUBJECT: Status of Declassified OSS Records

"In keeping with the provisions of the Privacy Act information concerning the affiliation of U.S. persons with OSS may not be released without the consent of the person involved."

c. As a matter of course the National Archives will honor the first restriction, to insure the continued protection of foreign government information as well as other non-OSS originated information still requiring security classification, as they have done in reviewing the State Department's OSS files. CIA's names restriction, however, the National Archives found both unprecedented and unworkable. Unable to process these records for release to the public, they discussed this restriction informally with Agency officers during 1980 and early 1981.

d. On 2 April 1981 the Archivist of the United States, Dr. Robert M. Warner, wrote to you that in his view the names restriction effectively negated the original purpose of the records' transfer, "which was to make public as much of the OSS story as possible, within the limits of present national security considerations." Noting that screening documents for individual names would be a resource-consuming operation, while the documents released would be too fragmentary to be useful to most researchers, Dr. Warner expressed hope for a reasonable resolution. Admiral Inman replied that CIA, recognizing the Archives' difficulty, was prepared to accept the return of these declassified records until they could be released without the names restriction.

e. The impasse remains. The National Archives still holds, but will not process or release, the 198 cubic feet of OSS records they received from CIA in January 1980. For our part, CIA has sent the National Archives no further OSS records, even though their declassification was completed in September 1982.

5. Final Check and Release:

a. Having identified CIA's imposition of the names restriction as the core of the problem, I asked the advice of the Office of General Counsel. In late September I found that in fact neither the Privacy Act nor any other law or regulation provides for such a restriction. In light of this information, the Information Management Staff decided to reconsider the names restriction.

CONFIDENTIAL

SUBJECT: Status of Declassified OSS Records

b. In a memorandum for the record of 9 November 1983, approved by the Deputy Director for Operations on 16 November 1983, the Chief of the Information Management Staff proposes to lift the names restriction imposed in transferring CIA's first increment of 198 cubic feet of declassified OSS records to the National Archives on 16 January 1980. (The restriction on foreign government information would, of course, remain unchanged.) Having agreed to remove the erroneous Privacy Act restriction, the Directorate of Operations proposes "...to transfer the declassified OSS records to the National Archives in stages, beginning with the least sensitive files. Prior to the transfer of any records, we would make a final check to ensure that any sensitive material is protected. This would consist of an inspection of each box of records to check that material bearing on foreign liaison or other politically sensitive areas is protected."

c. The Information Management Staff proposes this final check out of concern that the original reviewers "may not have taken into full consideration certain politically sensitive areas that might still be damaging to the national security and U.S. foreign relations." The memorandum adds that they expect to accomplish this final check "in relatively short order", since it will not require the time-consuming document-by-document inspection the DA's 15-member review team completed in 1979-82.

6. Discussion:

a. The Directorate of Operations' desire for a final check is, I believe, largely inspired by genuine apprehension about the the nature and rigor of the declassification review that the DA's Classification Review Division team carried out independently in 1979-82. Although the evidence I have seen convinces me that the original team conducted a cautious, thorough and highly professional declassification review, I respect the Information Management Staff's judgment in proposing their own quick final check of these records.

SUBJECT: Status of Declassified OSS Records

b. Before beginning this final check, the Information Management Staff's reviewers might usefully consult first with the Classification Review Division on the actual guidelines and procedures used in the original review, and then with the National Archives' Declassification Division about the processing (including the protection of foreign government information) that these records will receive before being opened to the public. In my view, such consultations should help the Information Management Staff move rapidly through their final check.

c. To expedite matters, the Information Management Staff proposes to go to the National Archives to check the 198 feet of OSS records CIA transferred there in 1980. If CIA lifts its names restriction and presses on with the transfer of these records, the National Archives' Declassification Division would expect to process around 200 cubic feet a month. This would appear to be a reasonable transfer rate for CIA to aim for.

d. The long delay in releasing these OSS records illustrates a problem that the Agency faces in organizing a new program to declassify and release historically significant records. Since this is not an activity that engenders much enthusiasm in this organization, direction and impetus from the center will be needed. On the other hand, even though the direction is central, the components providing the records must have a large enough role in the selection, review and release decisions to have confidence in the process.

e. Since the opening of these OSS, SSU and CIG records will inevitably receive a large amount of press attention, I would suggest that the Agency's Public Affairs Office work with its counterpart at the National Archives to decide how best to handle this event. [] Deputy Chief, Office of Legislative Liaison, has suggested that the release of these documents might usefully be timed to support efforts to carry the FOIA exemption bill through the House of Representatives. In any event, the opening of these records will demonstrate CIA's good faith in undertaking to declassify and release selected older records of historical significance.

7. Recommendations:

I recommend that you approve the following actions:

- a. That CIA notify the National Archives that we have agreed to withdraw the second, "Privacy Act", restriction on the 198 cubic feet of declassified OSS records transferred to them on 16 January 1980, with the provision that the Information Management Staff must carry out a final check of these records at the National Archives before they can be released to the public.
- b. That the Information Management Staff carry out their final check of CIA's declassified OSS records as soon as possible, beginning at the National Archives with those records now held there.
- c. That after completing the final check of the records now at the National Archives, or by no later than 31 January 1984, the Information Management Staff propose for your approval a schedule of estimated dates when the remaining increments will be checked and transferred to the National Archives.
- d. That the Chief, Public Affairs Office, consult with all parties concerned to determine how CIA should treat the opening of these records to the public at the National Archives.
